

A BOOK REPORT ON LORNA DOONE

This book was written in 1869 by Richard Doddridge Blackmore. Its copyright is 1938 by Scott, Foresman and Company.

The book is about robbers, murders, mysterious sounds, an unhappy family, a daring highwayman, and a fishing trip with a strange ending.

It all started when John Fry came to pick up John Ridd from school because his father had died and they needed help on the farm. One day, when John was thirteen, he went up the river into the Doones' territory to fish. Up or top of a waterfall he saw a beautiful girl whose name was Lorna Doone. Later on he found out that she was being held a prisoner by the Doones.

At the end the Doones are killed and John and Lorna marry.

This is one of the best books I have ever read. I recommend it for everyone.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor,

I think we have a good school. But there are a few things that need improving. I think that the bathrooms could be kept cleaner. There should be no paper scattered around the room. Neither should there be pieces of fruit, left there. The paper should be kept dry and out of the bathtub. The clothes should be folded and kept in the boxes on the floor. If people are going to put things on the shelves they should be put there neatly. If you are washing out something dirty, wash out the basin when you finish. Thank you. Letha Jo Wheeless
